Mr. Morrill raised a point of order, that resolution was not in order, inasmuch was a Legislative proposition. Sherman thought it would be unjust ontil all the precedents on the ques-d been,c ted. His recollection was propositions like this had been that no propositions like this had been that no propositions like this had been debted in any evening executive session erecalled, and he hoped Mr. Voorhees would be permitted to speak on the point of order.

Mr. Voorhees argued that the proposition was clearly in order and cited from the precedents to show that at a special executive session of the Senate any busiexecutive session of the did not the pre-cective session of the Senare any busi-rest could be transacted which did not need the co-operation of the House of Representatives. He quoted from the opinions of Chase, Seward and Douglass to the affect that the Senate, in special session, may do any act which it is compe-ted for it to do by itself without the co-operation of the House, and said that the theory was embodied by Sherman in a resolution and unanimously adopted. The proposition aubmitted needed no encurrence by the House, it was to give istemation about the great overshadowing mation about the great overshadowing information about the great overstandously appearance. It was to give the departments of the Government the opinion which the senate entertained on a great public matter, and it may be very important to certain branches of the Government that this expression of opinion should be made.

Mr. Morrill withdrew his point of order sgainst the resolution, which was laid over inder the rules.

The great centres of wholesale trade have been more affected, as is natural, by the interruption of business over the extensive regions of the northwest than the cities which depend in a greater degree narrow area. At the same time it would be a mistake to overlook the fact that the exchanges for the corresponding week of last year were extraordinarily large. The market had just escaped a severe money market had just escaped a severe pinch, a buoyant feeling prevailed, and prices were nearly at their highest. The theory that history repeats itself, and that another three months of almost continued depression will now begin, though circumstances are widely different from those of last March, does not seem to have much foundation.

The cylinder is connected with a spring on the inside of the car by means of a copper tube. An index moving over a graduated are is connected with the spring. The pressure upon the index is recorded automatically by means of a style upon paper unrolled at an even rate around a dram. The rate of speed and the time elapsing between any two points are also recorded automatically. The cylinder is filled with oil, instead of water, as the oil ecorded automatically. The cylinder is illed with oil, instead of water, as the oil will not cause corrosion. So powerful is the dynamometer constructed at Mount will not cause corrosion. So powerful is the dynamometer constructed at Mount Clare that a pressure of 35,000 pounds to the square inch has been secured. The enormity of this pressure as 15,000 to the acquare inch has been the pressure in 15,000 to the square inch. Such has been the pressure that the oll used in the experiments has been forced through the iron walls of the cylinder, two inches in thickness. Mr. J. N. Kalbaugh, Assistant Master of Machinery, is the designer of the dynamometer. It was constructed by Mr. Charles F. Turner, Superintendent of machine shops, assisted by Mr. Wm.G. Richardson, Examiner of Steam Gauges. The machine has been atached to the special car of Chief Engineer Randolph, and will probably be practically tested upon the roads of the company the middle of the present week Dynamometers are employed upon the railroad trains of Europe, and have been found to be exceedingly useful in determining the minimum power required to keep in motion a train of cars. The machine will be upon the road for several weeks, and will be tried upon portions of the road of greatest grade and where the curvatures of the road are the sharpest and longest.
